the boys to have a good time, as they will get old some day and then they must look wise and be solemn. The Chitric is auxious that the girls (blees their sweetness) should be happy also, and enjoy all the pleasures there are in life, for they will get aged some day and must then look after the boys who are old, and must then look after the boys who are old, and must then look after the boys and girls.

But there is a limit to all that is amusting and enjoyable and all that. The Curric wants the boys and girls to go skating and coasting and have all the fun they want. They must have a care, however, lest they infringe upon the rights of those who cannot go skating or coasting. It isn't overybody that can do so. When it comes to loading a cordon of coasting-sieds with boys and girls and eending it down the incline of a public street at almost lightning speed, dashing away werything in frontof them and endangering the lives of the many people who must cross the thoroughfare, as well as of the coasters, it is too much. And when there are a dozen of these coasting-trains in operation, so that it is almost impossible to pass the street, it is much too much. And when there are a dozen of these coasting on a number of our streets, Regulate it.

HE WAS ACCOMMODATING. How Mr. Wintersmith Settled a Fight for an Appointment.

Doorkeeper Wintersmith got the best of a couple of distinguished statesmen all the way from "Old Pike" (Missouri). It seems that Colonel Broadhead had got Mr. Naylor, a very efficient man, appointed to a place under the emeter may, appointed to a piace under the Doorkeeper. Congressman Clardy had no appointment. So yesterday Mr. Broadhead and Mr. Clardy together called on Wintersmith and asked him to appoint an Illinois man to a place. Now, it was very evident that there was more or less buncombe in the request. But Jim listened to their pleas, and when they were through he replied about as follows:

"All right, gentlemen, I have accommodated one of you before by making an appointment.
Now I see where I can accommodate both of Now I see where I can accommodate both or you, thereby satisfying both at one and the same time, and I will appoint this man and discharge Mr. Naylor."

"Oh, heavens:" exclaimed Brodhead, "that will never do. I will withdraw my request in this case and promise you never to ask you to appoint another man." That ended the fight.

"THE SIREN AND HER VICTIM.

"The Trail of the Serpent is Over Them Ail."

Gaboreau's "Clique of Gold" has a parallel in real life in wicked Chicago. The Sera in this case is a beautiful Jewess, as cunning and thoroughly unprincipled as was the heroine in the French author's imagination. Until recently she was an occupant of a fashionable boarding house on Calumns avenue. The victim is a wealthy Board of Trade man, who lives in luxury on Prairie avenue, the husband of an estimable and accomplished lady and the father of an interesting tamily. The story opens at a spiritualistic seance. When he beheld her face he was infattanted, and from that momenthe was her devoted, but subsequently suspicious and jealous lover. He invished his wealth and affection upon her, but soon began to wonder what his fair one did with the cash he gave her and whether there was not another fortunate man who shared with him the love of th ner and whether there was not another fortunate man who shared with him the love of the charmer.

A detective was detailed to work upon the case. A wealthy lumberman from the North soon engaged quasters at the Calumst avenue boarding-house. He was at leisure and sought the society of the fair Jewess. From acquaintances they became friends. At times the fair "Sara" seemed troubled and ill at ease, and at length unburdened her cares to this discrect lumberman. She admitted that she had a lover. She wanted a true friend, and she would counde in his discretton. Would he mail and receive important letters for her? Of course he would and did. He opened and read them. They were addressed to her husband on business in Leadville, and from their contents he learned that her husband was cognizant of the state of affairs in Chicago and was reaping the benedits of his wife's love making. The lover lost no time in confronted the beneditful sireu with the evidences of her perfidy. A stormy scene followed. She wept and pleaded for forgiveness, while he raved and swore and talked of blood, suicide and mother. Finding her game was slipping from the het, her true native asserted itself and sine became the asgressor. With threats of social catraciein, ruined character and broken family thes hanging over him he succumbed to her demands and paid the price of stience—$10,000. The beautiful Jewees has gone to her husband in Leadville, and the wealthy broker has retreated to the bosom of his family inwardly vowing that "the trail of the serpent!"
